Description/Significant Features:

The Apple Street neighborhood contains 11 single-family dwellings that were built circa 1940-1950. Located along both sides of Apple Street at and north of its intersection with Corley Heights Richardson Road, the neighborhood contains a mixture of common one-story vernacular house types, including one pyramidal hip roof cottage, five front-gable Bungalows, four side-gable cottages, and one Ranch house. The houses are generally in fair to poor condition with common modern alterations including synthetic siding and replacement windows and doors.

Historical Information

Historical Information:

Though it is located adjacent to the Barnwell Heights neighborhood, the Apple Street neighborhood was not developed as part of the SRS programmatic housing effort. It appears to have grown organically as a working-class neighborhood and is possibly associated with the former agricultural areas surrounding it.
