Here are five things to keep an eye on.

6th Circ. Judicial Elections Ruling Shores Up Partisan Trend

A recent Sixth Circuit decision backing the right of Kentucky judicial candidates to promote their party affiliation is the latest to push states with traditionally nonpartisan election systems closer toward campaigns clearly divided between red and blue candidates, experts say, potentially discarding a key barrier between elected judges and traditional politics.

Brexit Causes Massive Headache For TTIP Talks: Former USTR

The uncertainty swirling around the United Kingdom's decision to vacate the European Union has put the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership negotiations in a bind as the White House contemplates the best course of action for the massive agreement, former U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor told Law360.

Rule For Foreign Startup Founders Seen As Helpful Stopgap

A long-awaited rule that would allow immigrant startup founders to temporarily stay in the U.S. was largely greeted by attorneys Friday as a welcome stopgap since entrepreneurs have limited visa options, but its potential investment demands mean the program likely won't be for everyone.

Pa. Fracking Hopeful Says Court Should Weigh Well Block

A Pennsylvania landowner asked a federal court Friday not to toss its lawsuit against the Delaware River Basin Commission challenging its refusal to approve an exploratory well while a de facto fracking moratorium is in place, arguing it doesn't have to take up its case with the commission before heading to court.

HEALTH & LIFE SCIENCES

FDA Wants Blood Donations Tested For Zika Nationally

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Friday called for all donated blood to be tested for the Zika virus, not just donations in areas where the virus has been active.

Group Wants Out Of 'Irrational' ACA Birth Control Mandate

Secular anti-abortion group Real Alternatives Inc., in its effort to overturn a court order and become exempt from providing health insurance covering contraception, told the Third Circuit on Thursday that the federal government has no rationale to impose the mandate on nonreligious organizations that ideologically oppose certain contraceptive items.

TRANSPORTATION & INFRASTRUCTURE

NHTSA Proposes Speed Limiter Rule For Heavy-Duty Trucks

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration on Friday officially put their support behind the implementation of technology to limit the driving speed of heavy-duty trucks and vehicles, saying the move could reduce accidents and yearly fuel costs by more than $1 billion.

REAL ESTATE

Fla. Court Says Town's Liens Stand Despite Foreclosure Suit

A Florida appeals court has ruled that liens on a property recorded after the notice that a foreclosure suit had been filed are not extinguished by the foreclosure process, in a win for municipalities around the state dealing with unoccupied "zombie homes."

Texas Housing Credit Policy Upheld After High Court Remand

A Texas federal judge dismissed a nonprofit's Fair Housing Act lawsuit against the state housing agency Friday, saying the complaint can't identify a specific practice governing the allocation of tax credits for low-income housing that creates a racially disparate impact.

End-Of-Summer Recap For Government Contractors

It's been a busy summer for government contractors, with a torrent of regulatory changes and even a U.S. Supreme Court decision interpreting small business regulations. There are six key developments that every government contractor should know about before charging into the fiscal year-end frenzy, says Daniel Koch of Miles & Stockbridge PC.

Considerations When Invoking The Defend Trade Secrets Act

Prior to its enactment in May, many questioned the need for the Defend Trade Secrets Act of 2016. However, the DTSA is now law, and it is time to consider how the statute as enacted affects a trade secret owner's litigation decisions, say Nicholas Boyle, Christopher Manning and Richard Olderman at Williams & Connolly LLP.

New Truck Emission Rules Offer Advantages And Obstacles

A recent rule issued by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration promises to significantly lower greenhouse gas emissions from medium- and heavy-duty vehicles and aims to achieve the possibility of significant cost savings for fleet owners and operators. However, the new rule will also pose some challenges for the trucking industry, says Christopher Jensen at Hanson Bridgett LLP.

Litigation Privilege And Good Faith Under California Law

Understanding the intersection between litigation privilege and the obligation of good faith and fair dealing can be tricky. In California, there is substantial case and statutory law immunizing bad faith communications, but a small sliver of bad faith conduct may still be actionable, according to Joan Cotkin and Steven Knott of Nossaman LLP.

Clarity On The Term 'Reside' Is Good News For NY Landlords

Time will tell whether the New York State Legislature will entertain Judge Eugene Fahey's suggestion in his dissent in Yaniveth R. v. LTD Realty Co. For now, the New York Court of Appeals ruling reinforces a well-established understanding of the term "resides" in Local Law 1, say Brendan Fitzpatrick and Oliver Twaddell of Goldberg Segalla.
