South Carolina State Parks

at 20:00:00 on 12/07/2020 UTC · 🌐

December 7, 1941 -- 79 years ago today.....Have you ever noticed that the rock wall on the right side of the entrance to Lake Greenwood State Park is unfinished? Here's the story....
The CCC workers at Lake Greenwood began construction on the entrance wall to the park in the fall of 1941 but were interrupted following the bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7. As word of the attack reached the park, the men of the CCC (working there) stopped their work. The country had entered World War II, and the CCC boys building the rock wall at Lake Greenwood were deployed to fight. They traded their axes and shovels for rifles and ammunition. The CCC never returned to finish their work at the park, and until this day, the rock entrance wall remains unfinished -- a symbolic reminder of what happened that day.

Tommy Metz Melba M. Metts Daddy ended up with the "year books" that granddaddy had from the CCC's. When I was in college, I took a US history class covering the 1900-1960's and when we covered the depression naturally the CCC's were mentioned. After class one day I told the professor about Granddaddy being in the CCCs and mentioned the books, he asked to see them so I took them in. He had written a couple of books about the depression era and CCCs and wanted to study them/make copies of the books and pictures. He told me that one interesting thing was the fact that his camp or books covered the black units that were in the CCCs...

Pretty interesting stuff, I always admired what that generation accomplished and took pride that he was involved in the CCC's

Martin Fleming Knowing how they seem to take down these scenic rocks around town the city of Greenwood would probably take it down . Things like this should be left alone to show our history . The story of this is amazing how and why it was left this way !

Charles Thomas I have heard a few different stories about what happened afterwards. One is that they didn't find out until the 8th. When they did find out, they held a formation and marched to Chapels and boarded a train to Fort Jackson. The other story is that they were all sent home to await word on what to do next and were drafted from home. Anyone know for sure?

Herron Williams Yes I always like history. That's what I said in my hometown Bowman Ga. when they tore down the old Depot,s and the old water tank and a few more things maybe Bowman would not look more then a wide spot in the road if they were still there.
