I started with the Republican National Committee Presidential Polling Ballot and did a preliminary preference rating for the people I had heard of. Many of the 32 people I did not know much about. I thought to correctly fill out this Preference Ballot I should somewhat thoroughly and adequately give each of the 32 Republican Leaders an equal investigation. I chose Wikipedia as my search tool. Now I know all of these people better relying on what I hope is reliable biography and analysis from Wikipedia. As I read the Wikipedia articles on each of the Leaders I found that to be maximally analytical I would divide each of the rating categories into quarters thereby starting with Strongly Unfavorable as 1, 1.2, 1.4 1.6 1.8, Unfavorable as 2, 2.2, 2.4, 2.6, 2.8, Unclear/No opinion as 3, 3.2, 3.4, 3.6, 3.8, Favorable as 4, 4.2, 4.4, 4.6, 4.8, Strongly Favorable as 5. As I read the Wikipedia articles I wrote an X indicating where in my maximally analytical research method each Republican Leader's biography place them. Some of my previous favorites fell as I knew more about them. Other people who I previously didn't know much about assumed the most favorable status. Now I can state with certainty that Susana Martinez (New Mexico Governor) has been analyzed as having the highest analyzed recommendation for President with 4.6, followed by Nikki Haley (South Carolina Governor) and John Thune (South Dakota Senator) each with 4.4. Mitch Daniels (former Indiana Governor), Rick Perry (Texas Governor & 2012 Presidential Candidate), and Marco Rubio (Florida Senator) follow all with 4.2. Next all with 4.0 are Kelly Ayotte (New Hampshire Senator), Jeb Bush (former Florida Governor), Bobby Jindal (Louisiana Governor), Mike Pence (Indiana Governor & former Congressman), Tim Scott (South Carolina Senator), and Scott Walker (Wisconsin Governor). The Republican Party would do well to follow this research and strongly seek these mentioned people to be our National Leaders in the 2016 Presidential Election. Thank You John P. E. Curtin.
