Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu Speech to Congress Helpful? Harmful? Or No Impact at All?

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu warned Congress that world powers need a better deal than the one so-far discussed with Iran over its nuclear program prompting regional warfare. Netanyahu's speech was viewed by some to be harmful because it's seen as a direct challenge to President Barack Obama's efforts to reach a deal with Iran over its nuclear program.

Meanwhile, President Obama and a host of allied countries continue diplomatic talks with Iran and say they will not accept any agreement that could give Iran the ability to develop a nuclear weapon. If the U.S. and its partners can reach the framework agreement by the March 31 deadline, their next task will be selling it to critics in the U.S. and around the world. Well, it's been more than a week now since the Prime Minister's controversial trip to Washington to address Congress--and the political pundits are weighing in.

This week on the TV Show-- Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's recent speech to Congress about Iran's nuclear program. Helpful? Harmful? Or No Impact?

Tune in this Sunday morning, March 15th, from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. to WACH Fox 35.

After Selma: A Focus on Progress

It's been 50 years since the infamous Bloody Sunday March across the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma, Alabama that helped transform America. After Bloody Sunday, it became clear that the federal government had an important role to play in our nation's civil rights movement. Efforts to fully enforce the equality principles enshrined within the Fourteenth Amendment. Shortly after the attack launched on law-abiding citizens, the Voting Rights Act was drafted, vigorously debated by Congress and signed into law by Lyndon B. Johnson on August 6, 1965.

Today's Alabama, like many parts of the country, reflects signs of progress. Much of the progress is directly attributable to vigorous enforcement of the Voting Rights Act by the Department of Justice, civil rights organizations and other private litigants. Unfortunately, so much attention focused on inequities and problems that still exist, we often fail to recognize the progress that's been made.

This week on the radio show After Selma: A Focus on Progress. We'll celebrate collective successes and talk to some of the legendary voices from that time.

Tune in this Sunday evening, March 15th, at 6:00 p.m. to TheBigDM
