Celebrate World Migratory Bird Day this Saturday, May 12! When birds migrate between nesting and wintering sites, they don't just stop at random places. Birds rely on a handful of resource-rich and strategically located stopover sites where they may double their body weight as they acquire the energy-rich fat stores needed to fly thousands of miles across continents and oceans. Seen here is a Great Blue Heron and another tiny feathered friend at a stopover spot on a rainy morning at Andrew Jackson State Park. www.southcarolinaparks.com/andrew-jackson
