Seems like Chad and the other members would want to add something. This report is just a recitation of testimony and some recommendations to CHE; we could give guidance to them to add a few more meaningful takeaways in the report that is consistent with our position.

I didn't take away the need to provide them guidance, my understanding is that the general uselessness of the report was fine as long as it didn't seem to contradict or interfere with our approach to bonding this year, which it does not. Has that changed?

Do we need to just read Chad into what our plan is at this point; we don't want some vehement anti-bonding sentiment coming from our members prior to a substantial bonding proposal.

Thoughts?

Josh – per our discussion with the Governor on Friday on this topic, we need to give some direction to our committee members, ie. why higher ed doesn't need a GO bond bill. Can you draft comments/changes to this report that the members can review?

Dear Committee Members,

Please find attached for your review a copy of the draft report of the Joint Capital Bond Study Committee. In addition to the report, here's the link to the draft's "Appendices": <http://scstatehouse.gov/CommitteeInfo/JointCapitalBondStudyCommittee/AppendicesReview/AppendicesToTheReportOfTheJointCapitalBondStudyCommittee.pdf> (note the link is not "live" but given the size of the appendices, it is easier to provide you a link to the document rather than a series of multiple pdf attachments which is what would be required.)

By providing you this draft today, you and your staff are assured plenty of time for review over the upcoming holidays and are free to suggest changes, if any, you want considered by the Committee prior to 12/31.

Kara or I will follow up with you the week of 12/28.

Happy Holidays to you and yours and a great 2016!

Craig
