If we cannot come to a consensus, then we can just leave our appointees in holdover status.

Or, we could come to a reasonable agreement to recognize serving "more than 50% of a term" as a term but "less than 50% of a term" as not a term or some other bright line understanding.

Anything less would appear to significantly erode a governor's authority to make appointments, particularly since there has been no abuse or intent to abuse such authority by our office.

Interesting. No justification given for disagreeing with multiple AG administrations?

My opinion has not changed. Once we get back to the filibuster perhaps we can discuss.
