What might happen if we improved schools not from the top down but instead from the inside out---putting curiosity at the center of learning and unleashing a powerful, more engaging system of schooling? In this white paper, McREL's

Bryan Goodwin urges education leaders and policymakers to rethink the way we've been approaching reform for the past three decades. Goodwin shows how schools can flip the top-down paradigm by taking a few key, consistent actions that put student engagement, motivation, and true problem-solving at the heart of teaching and learning to create new, more powerful outcomes that set up students for lifelong success.
