From the scorching temperatures to a new rules package, Kevin Harvick says racing at Darlington on Labor Day weekend will be a different animal. Luckily for Harvick, he and his No. 4 team at Stewart-Haas Racing have shown the ability to adjust any variable thrown their way over the past two seasons.

Note: Harvick and Blaney drove the cars to the Governor's Mansion where they were joined by several dignitaries, including South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley. Haley, who last attended a Darlington race in 2011, announced she and family will be attending this year's race.

Ryan Blaney and Kevin Harvick hit the road to help promote the Bojangles Southern 500 Tuesday.

The road in this case was Interstate-20. The Sprint Cup drivers drove from Lugoff to Columbia as part of a cannon ball run for Darlington Raceway's Media Day.

Note: Harvick and Blaney made a stop for pictures at the state house and ultimately wrapped up their trip at the Governor's Mansion, where South Carolina Governor Nikki Haley talked about what the race means to the state.

NASCAR drivers made their way to the state capital Tuesday to spend a little time at the Statehouse and to ultimately end up at the Governor's Mansion. It was quite a special day for Darlington Raceway as drivers and dignitaries alike showed their support for the Bojangles' Southern 500.

Note: It was Darlington Raceway Media Day at the Governor's Mansion. Media personalities heard from Governor Nikki Haley along with drivers Kevin Harvick and Ryan Blaney.
