Format is not public and not for reporting. Please do not share that. The governor is still very much thinking through the best way to do this to showcase the state.

We are flexible to move about anything depending on what we think looks best, mansion staff will be on hand to make sure furniture is moved properly.

We are still planning on a one person address to camera however we did find out today the prompter is on wheels and moves in front of the camera rather than attaching.

Looks like Monday afternoon. Right now if I had to guess we would arrive maybe 3pm Monday and would like to get the room fully set up with lights as best we can. Then you could do a rehearsal that evening and then we would be done for the day.

TBD on when the satellite truck will come park - could be Monday evening, or, more likely, Tuesday morning.

Do you foresee any changes in your production? Still expecting a one person address to camera? I assume you are still deciding on walk-in/standing/sitting. Let's revisit your thoughts later this week, as big changes could impact our plans.

Looking at the photos of the house on the official website, I don't see anything too difficult to figure out if this remains a simple production in one of the first floor rooms. Historic homes usually have enough bric-a-brac for you and your team to compose a nice background. Speaking of which, will you have someone from the mansion staff to move any furniture or historic items? Or will Bryant and you have license to move that stuff?

I'm finishing my staffing now and will be in touch.

Funny question: how do you guys fly to/from DC? Not great flight times and almost all connect elsewhere. Considering flying to ATL and just driving. Is there a good option in your view?
