South Carolina State Parks

at 17:51:14 on 10/19/2010 UTC

TUESDAY TIDBIT! The historically correct, although not politically correct, name for the little sewing kit pictured below is a "housewife". Militiamen during the American Revolution wouldn't have went very far without one. Sewing was a skill common to most, if not all of the people in the colonial backcountry of South Carolina. Musgrove Mill State Historic Site will be holding a program that addresses life in the backcountry with a Living History Campout on the evening of October 23, reservations are required. For more information, call the park at (864) 938-0100.
