COMPUTRACE AS AN ADDITIONAL BENEFIT

Computrace is a theft deterrent. There many similar products to Computrace supported by nearly every Fortune companies. Many companies require work product protection of their data worth many thousands of dollars from theft, which Computrace protects efficiently. This same data protection is available to the buyer upon subscription. Computrace requires 1) a paid subscription to Computrace, 2) The RPCNET agent installed in Windows after the subscription is paid. Neither of these required two conditions are present on these machines; therefore, no legitimate concern of Computrace is present whether or not the buyer believes about the nature of Computrace; neither can Computrace be remotely installed clandestinely without the owners knowledge, if the owner somehow mistakenly believes Computrace has a nefarious agenda.

The two machines described above come with the Computrace nameplate appearing in the bios as shown in the item photo. This is a benign presence of a former owner's subscription to Computrace as a theft deterrent. The history of the machine can also be verified by calling the Computrace customer service number shown in the item photo above. If you are convinced this is spyware, we will not sell you this machine since you are misled. Due diligence can be performed by calling the Computrace Customer assistance shown in the item photo above, which we have posted as well as verified through other sources, combined with 30 years of Fortune company corporate IT experience.

As an additional benefit, the owner may choose to activate the Computrace subscription to preserve the integrity of work-product data as well as track the location of their machine if they choose to subscribe, as well as verify the history of the machine, for example that this machine is not stolen and resold. If your data has value, this theft deterrent could save you thousands of dollars should you subscribe. This cutting edge deterrent rivals high end Laptops at many times the cost as an additional protection benefit. AVNetmedia has no financial interest whether or not you subscribe.
