Vijaykumar So, Terraforming of Mars, is the hypothetical process of changing the climate and surface of Mars, so humans can inhabit it. Terraforming Mars would entail three major interlaced changes: building up the atmosphere, keeping it warm, and keeping the atmosphere from being lost to outer space. There are several proposed ideas to sublimate the carbon dioxide highly present in the Martian atmosphere and surface. This includes using orbital mirrors to sublimate the carbon dioxide ice sheet present near the poles, to create the greenhouse effect and heat up the planet or using spaceborne lasers to direct small comets into the Martian surface, which would do the same thing. Sounds like rocket science? Well, it is. Here's more - Comment

Amar Ambani, Head of Research, IIFL, said, "Coal India's operational performance was inline with expectations as the impact of lower realisations was offset by strong volume growth. Operating profit of Rs. 3,008cr was higher by 45.4% yoy and marginally higher than estimate due to lower provisioning for Overburden removal. Coal India is expected to report an increase in its margins led by higher production, reducing man power headcount, increased outsourcing and lower oil prices. Coal India is expected to report strong earnings growth over the next two years on the back of strong volume growth and higher share non-power sales. Downside from current levels would be supported by strong dividend yield."
