Introducing Invite a Colleague Functionality!

We are constantly working to improve the Community of Practice, and today we're introducing a very exciting feature: Invite a Colleague.

With Invite a Colleague, we're allowing you, the practitioners, to help grow the community. If you have coworkers to whom you would like to give access to the Community, or professional acquaintances you think would be a good addition, then this feature makes inviting them simple. We're letting you be the judge of who you think would make a good addition to the community. We're not limiting access in any way.

Inviting colleagues is straightforward. First, simply go to the Invite Page on the Community. The first field asks for a list of email addresses. For every person you want to invite, simply put their email address in this field. Separate them with a comma, or by putting each email on a new line. Finally, hit the send button, and the Community will automatically give those you invite full access to the Community of Practice. All they have to do is complete the registration form, and they'll be ready to go!

To use this feature, you have to be logged in to the Community of Practice. If you need assistance in logging in to the Community of Practice, please don't hesitate to contact us!

This Week's Insight: Community Recap for the Month of July

For this week's Insight, we'll be going over the Discussions and Insights added to the Community in July.

We added two more videos this month, Teri Takai's 2012 Shared Services Summit Keynote, and the 2012 Case in Point: Shared Services Pathways in Higher Education session.

We also had two Member Insights. Greg Wass detailed his experiences in Illinois and Australia with Shared Services efforts, and Antonio Oftelie reminded us that selling Shared Services is about more than just the immediate financial gains.

We had two Discussions started this month as well, from Ben Lowenthal and Rajkumar Prasad. Both received insightful responses from the community, so make sure to check them out if you haven't already.
