S.C. AT THE RNC

Haley speech gets thumbs up from national media

Some reactions to Gov. Nikki Haley's speech Tuesday to the GOP convention:

WSJ.com: For a

Republican presidential candidate hoping to woo women, minorities and conservatives, Gov. Nikki Haley of South Carolina offers a trifecta: She's the state's first female and first Indian-American governor, and she swept into office on a wave of tea-party support. ... Yet if Republicans were hoping her story would improve the party's standing among immigrant voters, part of her message seemed to work at cross-purposes. She lambasted the federal government for suing South Carolina over a controversial law seeking to crack down on illegal immigration.

Reporter Chris Cillizza, The Washington Post: Of all the men and women touted as rising stars within the GOP who took the stage on Tuesday, the governor of South Carolina was the best. She was poised and relaxed and drew the crowd to their feet with her mentions of the Palmetto State's voter ID law and the National Labor Relations Board fight.

Christina Wilkie, Huffington Post: (A) powerful speech that was widely praised. ... Haley is a rising star in the GOP firmament, and this speech strengthened her position.

Jay Nordlinger, National Review: I was kind of startled at what a Southern accent she has. ... At one point, she spoke an applause line, heard no applause, but waited for applause anyway. The audience, sensing this, obliged. Awkward. (But got) big, big "resonance" on the voter-ID issue. .... I can't believe Haley said "6,000 non-union (Boeing) employees," cheering, smiling. Kind of thrilling. Republicans are getting bold. ... "Bullying union bosses"! Bold, very bold.

David Horowitz, RedState blog: By far, the best of the governors (to speak Tuesday) was Nikki Haley. She actually connected the dots and showed how Obama is killing jobs. She was the only one to directly and unabashedly mention Obama's lawsuit against state immigration bills and explicitly called for the GOP to support similar laws.
