Wimping Out on Obamacare?

BY JEFFREY H. ANDERSON

After riding an anti-Obamacare wave to control of the Senate and gains in the House, Republicans seem to be focused on small-ball “fixes” to Obamacare that please their corporate backers, rather than on paving the way to full repeal and replacement.

2015 Is the Year of the Mandate

BY PHILIP KLEIN

In the New Year, Americans will start feeling the ill-effects of the coercive and unprecedented individual mandate—which fines those who don’t buy federally compliant health insurance—and Republicans would do well to target this core element of Obamacare.

Obamacare: The Real Pain Starts This Year

BY DAVID CATRON

Obamacare reduces access to primary care physicians, community hospitals, and E.R.s—“precisely the opposite of what most Americans wanted from reform”—and a conservative alternative needs to take things in the opposite direction.

Inaugural Podcast: The Crazy Ones

BY JEFFREY H. ANDERSON

Jeff Anderson talks with Owen Brennan and Patrick Jones about college football, a plan for overhauling the Republican presidential nomination process, and the importance of repealing and replacing Obamacare.

Family Fragmentation: Can Anything Be Done?

BY MICHAEL BARONE

The first step in reversing the devastating decline of the family—probably the greatest source of inequality in America—is to start expressing a clear preference, in speech, for two biological (or adoptive) parents.
