Konstantin Vengerowsky

Gov. Nikki Haley spoke about the success of foreign companies' investment in South Carolina in the last three years at a supplier event program at Kent International Inc. in Clarendon County on Tuesday. The meeting included 70 representatives from 25 bicycle parts manufacturers from all around the world, including China, Belgium, Holland and Taiwan, who came to tour the Clarendon County facility. The companies have an existing relationship with Kent International Inc.

Note: "We have been the number one state in the country for foreign direct investment in the last three years," said Haley, addressing a group of representatives from the various companies. "We focus on the customer and what we can do to build those relationships. We take all the work and confusion from you so you could focus on starting the process of getting your industry here."

Note: "Our focus in South Carolina is not putting the shovel in the dirt or cutting the ribbon," Haley said. "It's about making sure that you're successful. South Carolina is in the customer service business, and you are our customer. We invite you to join us in partnership with South Carolina, and let us show you what real success looks like in America."

Bicycle Retailer: South Carolina's governor greets Chinese industry executives at Kent factory

South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley warmly greeted a gathering of Chinese manufacturers on Tuesday promising them her support to do whatever it takes to interest them in setting up a factory in South Carolina. It was probably the first time a leading group of Chinese bicycle suppliers was greeted by a state governor.

Note: "If you plan to set up a company here we can get a workforce for you and make sure they are trained for the tasks you need," Haley said. "And I and my staff will work hard to overcome any issues that may arise."

Area Development: DC Machine Invests $5.3 Million To Expand Its Summerville, South Carolina, Manufacturing Campus

<http://www.areadevelopment.com/newsItems/9-22-2015/dc-machine-production-complex-expansion-summerville-south-carolina894324.shtml>

DC Machine, an industrial design and machining center that manufactures close tolerance components, is expanding its production complex in Summerville, South Carolina. The $5.3 million investment is expected to create 17 new jobs in Dorchester County.

Note: "DC Machine is a great South Carolina company that has been doing business in our state for more than a decade, and we couldn't be more excited to celebrate this expansion and the 17 new jobs it will bring to Summerville. It's always encouraging to see homegrown companies succeed in our state, and we look forward to watching DC Machine continue to find that success here for many years to come," said Governor Nikki Haley.

Gov. Nikki Haley is scheduled to speak this week at a conference targeted at some of South Carolina's up and coming leaders. Haley is slated to address the 2015 LeadSC gathering in downtown Columbia on Wednesday. Organizers say the conference brings together young professionals and some of the state's leaders, aiming to encourage communication and foster good relationships.

Cooper Thomas said he began cooking because he needed a job and money to pay rent.

"And I needed beer money," he joked. But it quickly became apparent that cooking was something he loved. Thomas began working in college as a short order cook at a Charleston deli and he fondly remembers the four ladies who worked there and taught him a lot of what he knows.

Note: He went to a lot of events that weren't required simply because he wanted to, she said, including a dinner party at Gov. Nikki Haley's mansion.

Editorial

In the past few days, North Korea has renewed its threat to produce nuclear weapons and to demonstrate its long-range missile capability to targets that could include United States. So much for the previous attempt by an American president to duck a challenge to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty by offering incentives.
