Gov. Nikki Haley's campaign has about $4.3 million available after her first-quarter fundraising, while her Democratic opponent has $1.7 million in the bank, their campaigns reported Thursday. The Republican governor reported raising $863,400 from January through March toward her bid for re-election. That's $300,000 more than state Sen. Vincent Sheheen's campaign said he raised in the quarter.

Note: "The governor is grateful for the generous support of so many across our state, support that means we will have the resources over the months ahead" to get her message across, said her campaign adviser Tim Pearson.

Warren Bolton

IMAGES ARE powerful, and it's hard not to wonder which of the prevailing depictions of Lt. Gov. Glenn McConnell — powerful former legislator or lover of all things Confederate — will most influence people's perception of the College of Charleston as he prepares to become the school's next president.

Post and Courier: Rethink sucker's deal with Iran

Editorial

Last fall Iranian President Hassan Rouhani traveled to United Nations headquarters in New York to reassure the world of Iran's peaceful nuclear intentions and to seek "better relations" with the United States, a "great nation."

Rock Hill Herald: S.C. lawmakers punish university again

<http://www.heraldonline.com/2014/04/10/5859530/sc-lawmakers-punish-university.html?sp=/100/105/121/>

Editorial

South Carolina lawmakers are back to meddling in the curricula of state universities again, and once more gay themes have sparked the intrusion. The question that residents who value free expression need to ask is, where does this stop?

Legislative Session News:

Post and Courier: South Carolina Legislature considers how to appoint special prosecutor in ethics cases

<http://www.postandcourier.com/article/20140410/PC1603/140419953/1031/south-carolina-legislature-considers-how-to-appoint-special-prosecutor-in-ethics-cases>

Jeremy Borden

The battle over ethics reform in South Carolina took a new turn Thursday as lawmakers killed but promised to resurrect a bill that would allow them to remove the attorney general and other officials from prosecuting certain ethics and public corruption cases.

Times and Democrat: Rep. Sellers floats plan to fund critical state needs

<http://www.greenvilleonline.com/story/news/local/2014/04/10/commission-make-duke-build-giant-solar-farm/7569637/>

Nathaniel Cary

A state utility board gave approval to Duke Energy to build a natural gas plant at the energy giant's current coal-burning plant in Anderson County, but denied a request from two environmental groups that wanted Duke Energy to also build a solar farm that would rival the largest solar projects in the country.

Post and Courier: New South Carolina teacher evaluation system gets closer to approval

<http://www.postandcourier.com/article/20140410/PC1610/140419919/1389/new-teacher-evaluation-plan-closer-to-approval>

Amanda Kerr

The state is one step closer to changing the way teachers are evaluated. The State Board of Education on Wednesday gave initial approval to a plan that ties teachers' performance more closely to student achievement. Evaluating educators based on performance is a required part of the state's exemption from the federal No Child Left Behind law.
