Subject: Tropical Update

Good Morning,

Another month of hurricane season awaits the vigilant and confounds the rest (Although, the threat of frost suspiciously seems to trump the threat of storm surge...). Only feature of quasi-interest is a diffuse area of low pressure, dubbed 95L, northwest of Puerto Rico Drifting west at 10-15 mph this feature is encountering increasing shear that will prevent any untoward intensification. Remnants of this feature turn north near 065W, bound for the cold reaches of the North Atlantic.

A cursory examination of the models by even the Huli Wigmen of Papua New Guinea reveals a jarring lack of tropical storm activity in the next 2-5 days. As such, tropical storm formation over the North Atlantic, Caribbean and GoMex is comfortably not expected this weekend.

Locally, severe clear for the weekend.

No Huli Wigmen of Papua New Guinea were harmed for this advisory.
