Subject: FW: Phase One - December 2015 Announcement.docx

Hi Holly –

Thank you for your help. As I noted, as legal owners of the fund, our foundation must demonstrate our ownership when awarding grants. This is a different type of release than those announcing the fund as this announcement can impact our legal standing as a publicly funded 501(c)3. I cannot put this at risk.

My edited version follows:

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

One SC Fund Awards $500,000 in Grants for Flood Recovery
Nineteen flood relief and recovery programs are funded through phase one grants

December 16, 2015 (Columbia, S.C.) – Today, the first grant recipients of the One SC Fund housed at Central Carolina Community Foundation, were announced. A total of $500,000 in grants will be distributed to the following nonprofits to support their flood recovery projects in a number of hard hit areas:

- All Hands Volunteers (Georgetown County)
- Black River United Way (Georgetown County)
- Central South Carolina Habitat for Humanity (Richland County)
- Habitat for Humanity Georgetown (Georgetown County)
- Hearts and Hands Disaster Recovery (Darlington and Florence Counties)
- Home Works of America (Richland County)
- IMPACT Ministries of Myrtle Beach (Horry County)
- Mennonite Disaster Service (Georgetown and Williamsburg Counties)
- South Carolina United Methodist Church (Berkeley, Charleston, Colleton and Sumter Counties)
- St. Bernard Project, Inc. (Richland County)
- Sumter United Ministries (Sumter County)
- United Church of Christ Disaster Ministries (Richland County)
- United Way of the Midlands (Richland and Lexington Counties)

Projects range from mold remediation that will allow people to safely remain in their homes, to complete home rebuilding. The participating nonprofits will be providing volunteer labor and an additional $2.5 million in financial support for the projects.

"We've asked the people of South Carolina to step up, and what we've seen so far is the best in our state - but there's more work to be done," said Gov. Nikki Haley. "If you were blessed and did not have damage to your home, if you were blessed and able to get back into a safe place, pay it forward. Give whatever you can to support the One SC flood relief fund."

One of the grantees helping our state recover is the Mennonite Disaster Service team. Members of the team arrived in South Carolina on October 12, one week after the floods hit our state. The team is establishing permanent work camps to host approximately 900 volunteers from across the United States and Canada who will build an estimated 70 homes during the next twelve months. Their first project is in Andrews, SC a community that was devastated by the flood. "MDS tries to find and meet the people who do not have resources to do the repairs themselves," said Larry Stoner, Disaster Relief Coordinator East. "Through All Hands Volunteers, another volunteer disaster recovery group on the ground in South Carolina, we were introduced to Andrews, SC, a community that desperately needed help from clean-up to rebuild. We were also introduced to Trinity United Methodist Church, a church that is providing temporary housing to our volunteers. Our One SC grant will allow us to continue our work in Andrews.”

The grant recipients were selected by a grants committee made up of representatives from four Community Foundations representing the 24 FEMA designated emergency counties, and business and civic leaders. These individuals know their communities well and helped to distribute the funds to areas where the dollars will have the greatest impact.

“The One SC Fund was established after October’s devastating floods to help bridge the funding gap in order to rebuild our state,” said JoAnn Turnquist, President and CEO of Central Carolina Community Foundation.

“The nonprofit organizations receiving grants will help more than 350 households resume their lives. We are grateful for their help.”
