SUGGESTED TALKING POINTS:

- It's certainly a great day in South Carolina when we can announce an exciting event like the 2017 SEC Women's Basketball Tournament coming to downtown Greenville and the return of a major SEC event to our state for the first time in over a decade.
- Greenville's selection as the host destination for this event is a huge win for South Carolina, resulting from two significant factors:
- Of course, one of these factors is the NCAA's decision to lift its ban on South Carolina.
- The reason this is so important to our state is that we love to have people come from all over the world to see all that South Carolina has to offer, and this is another way to bring those people in and see why we have been called the friendliest and the most patriot state in the county.
- The other factor in this decision is the continued success of Greenville's always-growing tourism industry.
- Think about how much Greenville has changed, has continued to grow, since the last time this event was held here back in 2005.

- When you see all of the new hotel properties, new restaurants and shops, and new attractions that have come to fruition over the past 12 years and it's easy to see why the SEC would jump at the chance to come back to Greenville – a destination that offers an unrivaled array of quality visitor experiences for its athletes and fans.
- Landing this event is certainly a testament to our state's appeal as a travel destination and also to the hard work and forward thinking of the people here in Greenville who allow this fantastic city's tourism industry thrive.
- It also serves a significant potential catalyst for further sports tourism growth by generating greater exposure for South Carolina and elevating our reputation as a premier sports event destination.
- I believe landing this event is a major milestone for tourism in South Carolina, the first of many collegiate sporting events that will see the value and benefit of selecting our state as their next host destination...
- ...and also the first of many sporting events that will help us grow our state's $19 billion tourism industry.
- We are glad to be back in the consideration set for NCAA post season events and glad that our friends at the SEC have selected Greenville as the host destination for their 2017 Women's Basketball tournament.
- Thank you.
