BMW is celebrating its 20th anniversary of building cars in the United States by investing $1 billion in its plant in South Carolina to build two of its new X-series vehicles at the facility that ushered in a wave of foreign automakers building Southern plants.

Note: "We love Germany. But South Carolina is now the BMW capital of the world," South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley said at a glitzy ceremony to both celebrate the expansion and honor what the German automaker has meant to the state.

BMW is planning to invest $1 billion and add hundreds of more jobs at its Upstate production facility as part of the automaker's plan to produce another SUV model. The company this afternoon announced that it will expand production with its X7 model, a new SUV that includes three-row seating.

Note: "BMW's decision to locate in South Carolina was a game-changer 20 years ago, and today's commitment of another $1 billion investment and 800 jobs in Spartanburg County is another game-changing moment," said Gov. Nikki Haley. "This is a real testament to our strong business environment and skilled workforce and we couldn't be more excited to see BMW continuing to grow and invest in our state for many years to come."

BMW said on Friday that it would invest $1 billion over the next two years in its factory in Spartanburg, S.C., which will become the German carmaker's largest production site. Expansion of the plant had been expected, but BMW did not disclose the scope of its investment until Friday at an event that Penny Pritzker, the secretary of commerce for the United States, and Nikki Haley, governor of South Carolina, planned to attend.

Chris Woodyard

BMW announced Friday that it will sink another $1 billion more into its South Carolina plant and add 800 jobs to build yet another model there, a three-row crossover SUV. The new X7 will be the fourth model being built at the plant in Spartanburg, which opened 20 years ago and has become a model of how a foreign brand can successfully build vehicles in the U.S. and export them around the world.

Greenville News: BMW to expand by 50%; add 800 jobs; build X7

David Dykes

BMW made an expected — but still stunning — announcement that it will expand its only U.S. manufacturing plant with a $1 billion investment to increase capacity 50 percent, add 800 jobs and produce a new, larger SUV for the company's world markets.

The State: BMW to invest $1 billion, hire 800 as it expands Spartanburg County plant to make large SUV

BMW will bring another 800 jobs to South Carolina as it invests $1 billion to expand its Greer manufacturing plant. The German luxury automaker made the announcement shortly after 1 p.m. Friday at the Greer plant, its only North American manufacturing facility. The company will expand the plant to make its new X7, its largest SUV.

Spartanburg Herald Journal: It's official: BMW announces addition of X7 to Spartanburg County plant

BMW Group announced Friday plans to add production of the X7 sports activity vehicle to its Spartanburg County facility, a $1 billion investment expected to create 800 jobs. The announcement coincides with the Spartanburg facility's 20th anniversary. The plant near Greer opened for business in July 1994.

WYFF: BMW announces $1 billion Upstate investment
<http://www.wyff4.com/news/bmw-announces-1-billion-upstate-investment/25212998>

BMW has announced a major investment in Upstate South Carolina that will dramatically increase plant capacity and create hundreds of new jobs. Dr. Norbert Reithofer, chairman of the board of management, BMW Group, was in Greer to announce that the company plans to invest $ 1 billion in Upstate plant.

Jim Fair

BMW announced a $1 billion investment by 2016 to extend its X family with a new X7 at Greer's BMW Manufacturing plant. The expansion will create 800 new jobs increasing the workforce to about 8,800 on site and increase plant capacity up to 450,000 vehicles, said Norbert Reithofer, chairman of the board for BMW Group.

February Unemployment News:

Post and Courier: South Carolina jobless rate plummets to 5.7% in February
<http://www.postandcourier.com/article/20140328/PC05/140329358/1010/south-carolina-unemployment-rate-dropped-to-57-percent-in-february-report-says>

Tyrone Richardson

South Carolina's unemployment rate plummeted to 5.7 percent in February, the largest one-month decrease in recorded history, state officials reported Friday. The state's number of unemployed for February was down 0.7 percent from the state's 6.4 percent jobless rate in January, according to the state Department of Employment and Workforce.

Note: "This morning we are celebrating our unemployment rate dropping to 5.7 percent and the fact that more of our citizens are working than ever before," Gov. Nikki Haley said. "It's a great day in South Carolina."

Horry County's unemployment rate fell by more than two points last month, an unusual statistical move for the middle of the winter and a sign that both the Grand Strand and state economies are improving more quickly than anticipated, according to Brad Dean, CEO of the Myrtle Beach Area Chamber of Commerce. Note: The news was hailed by S.C. Gov. Nikki Haley. "This morning we are celebrating our unemployment rate dropping to 5.7 percent and the fact that more of our citizens are working than ever before," she said.
