Dear Supporters and Friends,

I wanted to share with you this incredible article from Forbes Magazine: 'For The Life Of The World': When Young College Graduates Do Great Things. The piece features Teach For America - South Carolina alumna, Elana Jaret, who has entered her third year teaching middle school math at her original placement school, Sanders-Clyde Creative Arts School in Charleston County School District.

During her first two years as a Teach For America – South Carolina corps member, Elana worked in partnership with veteran teachers and families to push her students to achieve incredible goals. One of those goals included working with her students to create an Algebra 1 course, with 100% of students passing the exam at the highest pass rate in the district – including high schools! This school year, Elana and her students are eager to build upon their successes and continue pushing to be admitted to rigorous high school programs.

The accomplishments of Elana's students, and the students throughout the 220 classrooms our corps members lead, would not be possible without your support. We encourage you to schedule a visit to a corps member's classroom today! This is an exciting opportunity to see, firsthand, the ways in which Teach For America corps members are making an impact in classrooms throughout South Carolina. Please contact Amy Staples to schedule a classroom visit.

We sincerely appreciate your continued support as we work together to improve the quality of education for all children in South Carolina.

Thank you,
Josh
