New State Refor(u)m Chart on SIM and Population Health

Late last year, HHS announced that Round Two of the State Innovation Model (SIM) Test Awards would be awarded to support www.statereforum.org 11 states' efforts to build multi-payer models of health system transformation. Population health is an important component of the SIM awards and applicants were required to describe how their models would improve population health. State Refor(u)m's latest chart outlines these 11 Round Two SIM states' population health improvement strategies as defined by the states' proposals and other documents. The chart includes links to the relevant parts of the proposals and to the other documents.

Information about the Round One SIM Test Award states can be found in this previous State Refor\(u\)m chart.

New Webinar: Building an Equitable Health Care Delivery System: Federal and State Strategies

April 2, 2015

3:30-4:30pm ET

Register here

Federal and state policymakers are increasingly focused on addressing disparities as part of their approach to improving health, improving health care quality, and reducing costs. This webinar will discuss aligning payment models, creating new partnerships, and building infrastructure and data systems to achieve health equity. Speakers from Ohio and Louisiana will describe their states' health equity initiatives and the federal programs they are leveraging. An official from the CMS Office of Minority Health will describe federal resources to help states advance health equity and opportunities for alignment of federal and state activities.

Missed Our Webinar? Recordings and Slides Available: The Promise and Pitfalls of State-based Payment Reform

Many states across the nation are in the process of designing and implementing multi-payer payment reform initiatives. The goals of these initiatives are to improve patient experience, improve the health of populations, and reduce health care costs. Our recent webinar addressed how current payment reform models can help fix our broken health care delivery system and assist states to achieve the Triple Aim.
