Rubio-Haley new 'face' of Republican Party?

Governor's endorsement amid rumors she could land on GOP ticket shines light on 2 rising stars, may broaden appeal of conservatives

GRACE BEHMS/STAFF

Gov. Nikki Haley's endorsement of presidential hopeful Marco Rubio on Wednesday in Chapin helped boost Rubio's campaign ahead of Saturday's South Carolina Republican primary. Rubio and the governor, who is mentioned as a possible vice presidential pick, may infuse new life and energy into a party seen as appealing to a very narrow demographic.

SPARTANBURG — Gov. Nikki Haley's endorsement of presidential hopeful Marco Rubio has breathed new life into the GOP wing hoping to attract new, young and minority voters, and has some wondering about their possible future together.

Both Rubio and Haley have long been viewed as rising stars in the Republican Party, and Haley has been mentioned as a possible vice presidential pick for the party's ultimate nominee.

After weeks of speculation, Haley took a risk and endorsed Rubio at a campaign rally Wednesday in Chapin. And as children of immigrants who achieved the American dream, both 44-year-olds are often referred to by voters and pundits as the party's future.

Haley downplayed that notion Thursday, saying that it was a

Trump fired back that the spiritual leader for the world's 1.2 billion

Roman Catholics was out of line. "For a religious leader to question a person's faith is disgraceful," Trump told a room full of supporters at Turtle Point Golf Club. "I am proud to be a Christian and as president, I will not allow Christianity to be consistently attacked and weakened, unlike what is happening now with our current president."

Criminal justice reforms in works

Charleston County responds to challenge

BY CHRISTINA ELMORE
celmore@postandcourier.com

Charleston County officials on Thursday unveiled a three-year plan to improve the local criminal justice system by reducing over incarceration and streamlining court proceedings.

The county's Criminal Justice Coordinating Council created the multi-pronged initiative after analyzing data provided by local law enforcement, the 9th Circuit Solicitor's Office and other agencies.

The council submitted its plan to the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation in response to a challenge from the organization that encouraged the nation to change the way it viewed and used jails.

Charleston County is seeking a $3.4 million grant from the foundation to fund the personnel and other resources needed to move forward with its initiative.

Experts to weigh in at Charleston event

BY BO PETERSEN

It used to be not so unusual to find a deer, bear or panther penned in a country backyard as a curiosity. Traveling circuses featured huge animals such as elephants or giraffes. Zoos and aquariums were little more than cages and tanks.

Times have changed. Today, "wild animal" exhibits are criticized as inhumane and struggle to maintain an audience. People flock to rescue and sanctuary efforts. Reintroduction to the wild is the sought-after ideal. The larger accredited zoos and aquariums themselves are evolving, becoming more habitat-oriented in exhibits and using captive animals to educate about conservation of the species.

Saturday's S.C. primary forecast: A record GOP turnout

BY ROBERT BEHRE
rbehre@postandcourier.com

Six candidates still in the race. Mixed results from the nation's first caucus and primary. A ton of money spent. All the ingredients are in the pot for a record turnout in South Carolina's GOP presidential primary.

"That is a defining story of this election cycle," said state Republican Party Chairman Matt Moore. "The interest and engagement in this election are through the roof."

Moore predicted total turnout Saturday could reach 650,000, which would shatter the 2012 record by almost 50,000 votes.

The early absentee voting already has broken records.

As of Thursday, South Carolina had issued 53,129 absentee ballots in the GOP primary and already had 45,672 returned, according to the State Election Commission.

LANE CLOSURES

Work to begin on I-85

$51M project should be complete by late 2017

By Chris Lavender | chris.lavender@shj.com

Drivers traveling a 12-mile stretch of Interstate 85 in Spartanburg County will face lane closures beginning Friday night as reconstruction work begins on that portion of the highway.

Dennis Garber, assistant district instruction engineer for the South Carolina Department of Transportation, said Sloan Construction will restructure and pave a section of interstate in each direction between mile markers 56 and 68. Mile marker 56 is located near Highway 14 and mile marker 68 is located near Highway 129.

The $51 million restructuring and paving project is scheduled to be completed by late 2017, according to Casey Schwager, area construction manager for Sloan.

An earlier plan to resurface that section of the interstate was scrapped last year after crews found the road was too deteriorated to proceed. Garber said the project was rebid in September, with a contract awarded to Sloan in October.

Schwager said there will be single-lane closures during the day and double-lane closures during the night beginning on Friday and lasting through Sunday. After Sunday, Sloan will conduct the work solely during the nighttime hours with single-lane closures in both northbound and southbound directions.

"Anybody traveling in the area should expect minor delays," Schwager said.

Sloan will begin the rehab work in the left lane of the interstate in both directions. Schwager said work crews will go five inches below the road's asphalt surface to do the rehab work before it's paved.

Davis: US earmarks freed for other uses

TIM SMITH
TSMITH@GREENVILLENEWS.COM

COLUMBIA - A state senator filibustering a roads bill says that federal earmarked funds held by the state for Interstate 73 can now be used on other roads.

Sen. Tom Davis, a Beaufort Republican who for a second day held the Senate podium to talk about accountability at the state Department of Transportation, argued that DOT holds millions of dollars in federal earmarked funds that can be used on highway projects different than those the money was received for if the earmarks are 10 years or older.

Davis said the commission's chairman has said that about $50 million in federal earmarks and grants received for I-73 is escrowed by the state Department of Transportation and can only be used on that project.

"That's not true," Davis told the Senate.

He said because of action by Congress late last year, any earmarks at least 10 years old that do not have significant amounts obligated for construction are freed to be used for other purposes.

That totals $96 million in South Carolina, he said, $36 million of it earmarked for I-73. Davis said he learned of the congressional action through his own research, not from anything DOT had told him.

"This is an example of what I would submit to you we are not focusing enough on," Davis told the Senate. "The money earmarked for I-73, because of what Congress just passed, is money we can muster to pay for those things."

DOT Chairman Mike Wooten, who lives in Horry County, told The Greenville News Thursday it was his understanding that the federal legislation passed last

A combative contest among six challengers is expected to produce a record voter turnout in Saturday's GOP presidential primary.

As of midday Thursday, about 38,000 absentee ballots had been cast in the GOP contest. That exceeds the 35,595 absentee ballots cast in 2008 — a record total that included both the Democratic and Republican presidential primaries.

The turnout record for the GOP primary was set in 2012 — at 583,000 votes. However, voters who want to cast ballots for or against GOP front-runner Donald Trump are expected to exceed that total.

Elections officials in Lexington County, a Republican bellwether, expect 20,000 more votes to be cast Saturday than during the 2012 primary.

The outcome of Saturday's primary is expected to winnow the number of GOP candidates — now six — but stop short of clearing the way for a political coronation as it has done in the past.

"I don't necessarily think South Carolina is going to decide the nominee, but we'll help sort out the field," Furman University political analyst Danielle Vinson said.

The question likely to be de-

Local officials endorse candidates Republican lawmakers weigh options ahead of Saturday primary

By COLIN RIDDLE
criddle@indexjournal.com

As the first-in-the-South Republican primary approaches, a number of state leaders have announced endorsements of candidates in the past week, while local leaders are still weighing their options.

"You want to be thoughtful, and you want to pick the right guy," said state Rep. Craig Gagnon, R-Abbeville, who jokingly shared he was endorsing "Mr. Unc-

Many representing the Lakelands on the state level are in the same boat. State Rep. Mike Pitts, R-Laurens, said he narrowed his decision down to U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz from Texas and U.S. Sen. Marco Rubio from Florida, who join reality TV star and businessman Donald Trump as the top three candidates in national polls. Cruz recently received the endorsement of U.S. Rep. Jeff Duncan, who represents South Carolina's 3rd Congressional District.

Rubio was endorsed by South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley on Wednesday and has held onto another from South Carolina's junior U.S. Sen. Tim Scott. The state's senior U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham has endorsed Jeb Bush, who has been near the bottom of polls with retired neurosurgeon Dr. Ben Carson and Ohio Gov. John Kasich.

Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster endorsed Trump last month, a notion Pitts said he will not offer.

SHANE

Pitts said he has met with Trump numerous times and does not think his business tactics will make him an effective leader in government. "They get so impatient with the system of government that they make some serious mistakes," Pitts said. "I really question his sincerity of being in the race, because Trump does a lot of talking, but he doesn't say much."

He added Trump has a tendency to make rash decisions, which could hurt international relations if he got to the White House.

"Trump can do the job, but he's not going to walk in the door with a good understanding of government," Pitts said.

Pitts said Trump is resonating with voters because the majority of people are afraid of and angry at the federal government.

Florence County Pension fund has $49M deficit

BY JOSHUA LLOYD
Morning News
jlloyd@florencenews.com

FLORENCE — A budget audit report presented at the Florence County Council meeting Thursday showed a $49.6 million deficit for Florence County, due to underfunding estimates in the state pension system.

Auditors said this isn't a negative reflection on Florence County's budget handling, but rather a shortfall at a state level.

Council Vice Chairman Kent Caudle said the deficit shows as unfunded potential for state employee retirements, including state agencies, higher education, school districts and local government.

This means if everyone lived the expected lifespan, the state projects that there isn't enough funding to handle pension payouts.

"We (Florence County) have lived up to our obligation, and have been sending that money to them," Caudle said. "It isn't that we haven't funded that $49 million, which would be almost 25 years' worth of funding. The returns have not come in as the state anticipated them to, but they still have the obligation to pay up for retirements."

He said Florence County pays about $2 million each year into the state retirement system.

Auditors said the deficit is not exclusive to Florence County and doesn't reflect negatively on the county's bond rating.

Florence County Finance Director Kevin Yokim said the county's

BEAUFORT COUNTY REPUBLICANS

What is GOP's track record in primaries?

County voted for eventual nominee in last 5 out of 7 GOP primary elections without a Republican incumbent

Local popular vote has differed from the state winner half the time

Conservative fiscal, military issues central to win Beaufort County

BY ERIN HEFFERNAN
cheffernan@islandpacket.com

S.C. Republicans like to say the state's first-in-the-South primary is the gold standard for picking Republican nominees, with all but one of the state winners becoming the eventual nominee since 1980. The exception was Newt Gingrich in 2012. But Beaufort County has its own presidential primary tradition. County voters have favored the eventual nominee five times out of seven elections without a Republican incumbent with voters tending to favor fiscal conservatives and candidates focused on military issues, according to the state's politicians.

Local voters at times stand out from the rest of the state. In three of the last six GOP primaries without a Republican incumbent, the candidate that won South Carolina failed to win Beaufort County.

THE GREAT SOUTH CAROLINA POLITICAL DIVIDE

One reason South Carolina may be so accurate in predicting the Republican nominee is that there are multiple Republican constituencies concentrated in different parts of the state, experts say.

The classic divide categorizes the Upstate voter as more motivated by social issues, while the Lowcountry is dominated by fiscal conservatives, said former Republican political consultant David Woodard, who is now a political science professor at Clemson University.

"The difference is more than geography," Woodard said. "There's a different culture, a different background and it occasionally shows up in an election."

A Feb. 12 presidential primary poll from Opinion Savvy showed that likely Republican voters in the Lowcountry tend

Fathers coalition opening in Sumter

BY JACK OSTEEN
jack@theitem.com

"A father is a man who expects his children to be as good as he meant to be."

This was just one of the many messages brought to a room full of more than 50 community leaders Wednesday at University of South Carolina Sumter at what some think is one of Sumter, Lee and Clarendon counties' most important new initiatives.

The Midlands Fatherhood Coalition, which helps non-custodial dads become responsible fathers to their children, is opening an office in Sumter in connection with a plan by the state Department of Social Services to expand such services statewide. This will be the 13th office in South Carolina.

During the last few years, DSS has embraced the approach taken by Midlands Family Coalition and its affiliated programs. Traditionally, enforcing child support was about finding "deadbeat dads" and sending them to jail, where they couldn't help their kids or anyone else. The program hopes to turn those dads' lives — and those of the children — around completely by getting them jobs and teaching them better parenting skills.

FATHERHOOD COALITION FACTS

- Served 13,477 fathers since 2001;
- Affected more than 22,900 children;
- Saved more than $15 million in incarceration costs since 2006;
- Collected $1.1 million in child support since 2012;
- 36 percent of fathers helped don't have a GED or high school diploma; and
- Average age of fathers served is 33.

7 Types of Poverty

1. Spiritual poverty: A lack of the commonality between God and man where there is no hunger or thirst for righteousness; also a togetherness/brotherhood plays an important role in this type.
2. Mental poverty: Lack of thinking, which is resultant of lack of access to education and knowledge.
3. Bodily poverty: Lack of proper physical health and access to healthy living conditions.
4. Societal poverty: Lack of social connectivity.
5. Cultural poverty: Lack of coming together in a society. No collaborative activities taking place which leads to disconnect between people.

Joseph Manners was sentenced to two life sentences and 30 years, to be served consecutively, on Thursday afternoon after he was convicted for a 2013 arson and murder of his grandparents, James and Joann Topper.

Manners was convicted of setting fire to his grandparents' house on Barnwell Drive on June 1, 2013, killing the couple.

Circuit Judge Jeffrey Young said he has presided over many trials, but this murder trial was the most horrific. He said the acts involved are beyond his comprehension.

He called Manners an unrepentant, cold-hearted murderer who cremated two people whom he said loved him.

Young sentenced Manners to spend the "balance of his natural life" in South Carolina Department of Corrections facilities for both counts of murder and 30 years for first-degree arson. It is the court's intention that Manners never walks as a free man, he said.

Before the jury, consisting of four women and eight men, presented its unanimous guilty verdicts to the court, Assistant Solicitor John Meadors brought in a 10th and final witness, Joseph Powell, an arson and explosives analyst with the Sumter County Sheriff's Office.

Meadors introduced Powell as an expert in petroleum accelerants. Powell said he found gasoline present in three of the fire debris samples collected from the Toppers' house in June 2013.

Meadors later pointed out that the three samples had been collected near James Topper's body; one sample was taken from part of the underwear that was found partially undamaged under his body.

Defense Attorney Timothy Griffith asked Powell if ethanol from alcoholic beverages was found in the debris samples. Powell said he looked for ethanol in the samples because it is a type of petroleum, but none was found.

Griffith asked if any debris samples were taken from a storage space under the stairs, where alcoholic beverages could have been stored. Powell said, "no."

Manners refused to testify during the trial, as was his right provided by the fifth amendment of the U.S. Constitution, according to Young.

During closing arguments, Griffith asked the jury to consider every piece of evidence presented by both sides.

The defense attorney presented the two consent forms signed by Manners — one with an uneven signature that Manners signed after being read his Miranda rights in a hospital in Cincinnati, Ohio, on June 3, 2013, and the other signed about a month later with a leveled signature.

Griffith asked the jury to consider whether his client was capable of understanding what was being said during his interview with Sgt. Jennifer Mitsch with Cincinnati
