Researchers have recently discovered that the opossums undercoat glows under UV light -- a trait called biofluorescence. Scientists are still not sure why, but think it has something to do with the animal's nocturnal activities. Our own opossum whisperer, volunteer Amy, at the Charles Towne Landing Animal Forest, wanted to conduct the experiment with Crowder, our resident opossum, to see if this discovery was indeed true. Turns out, it is! Crowder glowed a brilliant pink beneath the UV light! Nature is so amazing! <https://southcarolinaparks.com/see-and-do/wildlife/the-animal-forest-at-charles-towne-landing>
