

Clemson University Assisting 16th Annual Southeast Vegetable and Fruit Expo Conference in North Carolina

The produce industry will once again have an opportunity to learn, share, and network at the 16th Annual Southeast Vegetable and Fruit Expo. The conference will take place December 10 –12, 2001, at the Sheraton Greensboro Hotel at Four Seasons Koury Convention Center in Greensboro, N.C. People from all aspects of the produce business are encouraged to attend.

The Southeast Vegetable and Fruit Expo program will be kicked off with a keynote address from Ms. Edith Garrett, President of International Fresh-Cut Produce Association. Ms. Garrett will be addressing "Value Added: Tapping into Tomorrow's Opportunities for Profit".

The remainder of the conference will consist of concurrent sessions. Participants will be free to move around to sessions that interest them the most. The program committees have worked very hard to design a program that is timely and topical, to meet the needs of attendees.

To top it all off, an extensive trade show will be held throughout the three-day exposition, allowing those involved in agriculture to learn about useful products and services as well as network with potential business contacts.

The Southeast Vegetable and Fruit Expo is sponsored by the N.C. Vegetable Growers Association in cooperation with Clemson University, North Carolina A&T State University, N.C. Agricultural Research Service, N.C. Cooperative Extension Service, N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, N.C. Division of Energy, N.C. Farm Bureau, N.C. Pickle Producers Association, N.C. State University, and N.C. Sweet Potato Commission.

For more information or to register, please contact Bonnie Cathy Price at the N.C. Vegetable Growers' Association, 919-334-0099 or email bhollom@bellsouth.net. You can also visit the web site at <http://www.ncvga.com>.

Ag EXPO Set for January

Mark your calendars for the seventh annual South Carolina Ag EXPO to be held in Columbia on January 22 – 23, 2002 at the Sheraton Hotel and Conference Center.

The Ag EXPO gives row crop farmers and other agricultural representatives an opportunity to gather together and exchange information pertaining to the upcoming crop year. Experts from Clemson University and other institutions will present their recommendations for the soybean, cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco and peanut crops. In addition, agricultural economists will present the economic outlook session for the upcoming year.

"Ag EXPO is an excellent chance for farmers to get a head start on their crops for the year," said M.D. Floyd, farmer and president of the South Carolina Soybean Association.

In addition to educational sessions, farmers will have an opportunity to visit the agricultural trade show as part of the Ag EXPO. Vendors from various sectors of agriculture will be on hand to visit with farmers.

Food safety: What really makes people sick?

Consumers are bombarded through newspapers, magazines and television with information about the dangers of foodborne illness.

Although pesticide residue is a favorite topic often blamed for food-related illness, what really makes people sick is the one thing most don't worry enough about -- microbes.

Simple microbes such as E. coli, Salmonella, Listeria, Campylobacter, Staphylococcus, and other bacteria are more likely to cause illness than pesticide residues, according to Dr. Stan Schuman, medical director of the Agromedicine Program, an educational effort sponsored by Clemson University and the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston.

"It's more important to rinse your fruits and vegetables with running water for enough time to remove dirt and microorganisms than it is to remove pesticide residues that may not be there," said Schuman.

Nationally 40 to 50 percent of fresh produce shows no residue at all, according to Bob Bellinger, Clemson Extension pesticide training coordinator.

Food-related illness hits between 3.3 and 12.3 million Americans each year, kills 3,900 and costs an estimated $35 billion in medical expenses and loss of production.

Microorganisms continue to evolve, often increasing their degree of virulence. In 1990, the U.S. Public Health Service identified E.coli, Salmonella, Listeria monocytogenes and Campylobacter jejuni as the four most serious foodborne pathogens in the United States because of the severity and estimated number of illnesses they cause.

A Taste of SC Quality

For the past eight years South Carolina has been home to a prestigious culinary competition in the lowcountry. Fifteen or more professional chefs from the Grand Strand and SC coastal restaurants vie for the SC Chef of the Year award. "A Taste of the Tideland" strives to encourage creativity in the culinary arts, promote tourism through the restaurant industry, and generate funds for culinary arts scholarships and for charities. This year proceeds will be donated to the Ernst Royal Scholarship for Carolinians, which was established to enable SC chefs to attend the Culinary Arts Institute, and to the Uniformed Firefighters Association Widow's and Children's Fund of NY.

"A Taste of the Tideland" chose to salute Ferdinand Metz, the Culinary Institute of America's retiring president, for 2001. Metz is an American Master Chef and has not only been an individual competitor for the US Culinary Olympic team, but also the captain. He has brought home fifteen individual gold medals and led the team to three consecutive world championships. In addition, Metz is considered America's ambassador to the culinary world and has brought respect worldwide for American cuisine.

Serving as judges along with Metz were Bradley Ogden, famed chef and co-owner of The Lark Creek Inn in Lakespur, CA, as well as Donald Barickman, one of the South's most prominent chefs and owner of Magnolias Upper Level Gallery and Blossom Café in Charleston. Also present was Battalion Commander of the NY City Firefighters, Kevin Scanlon, and his wife, Sue.

Each year top chefs whip up their best concoctions of appetizers, breads, salads, vegetables and starches, entrées and desserts. Dishes are judged on taste, presentation, creativity and composition. Various awards are given in each individual category and a special "Serving SC Quality" award goes to the chef who best represents predetermined SC products in a dish. This year the chefs prepared dishes with beef, tomatoes, Adluh flour, apples, fall squash or pumpkins.

The blending of sights, sounds and smells tempted all the senses as each chef presented an array of exotic dishes. Everything from braised short ribs of beef "Clemson Style" to "Carolina Blonde Beer" sage bread with apple cinnamon butter made with Adluh flour was served to the judges in competition for the "Serving SC Quality" program.

Although surely not an easy task for the distinguished judges, they could only choose one person to take home the trophy. This year's winner of the "Serving SC Quality" award was Chef Michael Wallace with the Hilton Oceanfront Resort for his Carolina Crab cakes presented with fried green tomatoes and served with Creole mustard aioli.

South Carolina products stand on their own, but as Ferdinand Metz would say, "Preparation is everything." Thank you to all the chefs and coordinators of this event who worked hard to make it happen. Even though there could only be one Serving SC Quality award winner at "A Taste of the Tideland", all of the competing chefs are winners for serving SC products on their menus.

We are proud every year to showcase outstanding SC products at "A Taste of the Tideland," and Chef Wallace did an excellent job of combining Adluh flour and SC tomatoes to create a delectable appetizer. Congratulations, Chef Wallace, for serving a taste of SC Quality!

Food safety

"Twenty years ago, Campylobacter, Listeria and E.coli were unrecognized as sources of foodborne disease," said Libby Hoyle, Clemson University Extension food specialist.

At the same time, bacteria already recognized as sources of foodborne illness have found new modes of transmission. While many illnesses from E.coli occur from eating undercooked ground beef, these bacteria have also been traced to other foods, such as salami, raw milk, lettuce and unpasteurized apple cider. Salmonella enteritidis, which once only contaminated the outside of eggshells, is now found inside many eggs, making uncooked eggs unsafe to eat.

Compounding the problem is the hectic American lifestyle. We are spending 51 percent of our food budget in restaurants and takeout windows. The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) estimates that consumers spend 43 cents of every food dollar eating out.

An increasing amount of food prepared away from the home is then taken home for consumption, creating new opportunities for mishandling. Americans are relying more than ever on the judgment and knowledge of others to ensure safe food for your families.

"Research has shown that clean, healthy employees and controlling the temperature of foods are the two most important food safety practices when protecting the consumer in the industrial setting," said Hoyle.

When we do eat at home, we are spending less time and care preparing the meal and taking fewer precautions to ensure the food we eat is safe.

Translating food safety concerns into wise choices can be a daunting task. But there are a few simple procedures to follow when preparing food at home to ensure your family is protected, according to Hoyle.

Clean: Wash hands in hot soapy water before preparing food. Wash cutting boards, knives, utensils and counter tops in hot soapy water after preparing each food item, before going on to the next one and after use. Use plastic or other nonporous cutting boards. Consider using paper towels to clean up kitchen surfaces. If using cloth towels, wash them often in the hot cycle of the washing machine.

Separate: Cross-contamination is how bacteria spread from one food product to another. This is especially true for raw meat, poultry and seafood. Keep these foods and their juices away from ready-to-eat foods. Separate raw meat, poultry and seafood from other food in the grocery cart. Store raw meat, poultry and seafood on the bottom shelf of the refrigerator, so juices don't drip onto other foods. Always wash cutting boards, knives and other utensils with hot soapy water after they come in contact with raw meat, poultry and seafood. Never place cooked food on a plate that previously held raw meat, poultry or seafood.

Cook: Cook to proper temperatures. Foods are properly cooked when they are heated for a long enough time and at a high enough temperature to kill the harmful bacteria that causes foodborne illness. Cook eggs until the yolk and white are firm. Don't use recipes in which eggs remain raw or only partially cooked. Cook fish until it is opaque and flakes easily with a fork. When cooking in a microwave, make sure there are no cold spots in food where bacteria can survive.

Chill: Bacteria multiply rapidly between 40 degrees F and 140 F. Refrigerate foods quickly because cold temperatures keep most harmful bacteria from growing and multiplying. Public health officials recommend setting the refrigerator at 34 to 38 F and the freezer unit at 0 F. Never defrost (or marinate) food on the kitchen counter. Use the refrigerator, cold running water or the microwave. Don't pack the refrigerator. Cool air must circulate to keep food safe.
