Friday morning our rangers and staff at Huntington Beach State Park awoke to a stranded loggerhead sea turtle in the pluff mud off of the main causeway. They rescued the turtle, who was injured and somewhat tired from being in the mud overnight. It was immediately transported to the sea turtle hospital at the South Carolina Aquarium. Here are some photos of the rescue and transport. We will keep you up-to-date on the turtle's condition, but at last check, they think they will be able to nurse the turtle back to health! More info can be found on the S.C.U.T.E. facebook page!
