Hello Mr. Christian thanks for the help last semester with that situation. Also, I had an idea for the tax relief tour this year. I know some parents can deduct material contributions to parent-teacher associations, but not time or commitment to parent-teacher orgs. Since parents and teachers play an integral part in a child's education their need for a strong connection is a must. Therefore, it would be great to suggest a dollar for every hour a parent commits to their children's parent-teacher association meetings or similar orgs. The parents could then write off any hours that have been documented with the organization for a small tax credit yearly. This would give parents incentive to get involved and even if this may not get through the legislature. It would be seen as a noble intention for you.

Best,

Jordan
