Good Afternoon:

We are now less than a month away from the 2014 National Summit on Education Reform. As of today, we only have seats left, and registration will close soon! Visit ExcelinEd.org/National-Summit to reserve your spot to join Governor and ExcelinEd in Washington, D.C., for this special event on November 20-21.

Once again, we have an exciting lineup of national and international leaders to cover some of the most important topics and latest innovations in education. Take a look at some of the speakers and sessions in store at #EIE14:

- On November 20, Chris Anderson, the curator of TED, will give an innovative TED talk.
- The next day, Campbell Brown, journalist and founder of the Parents' Transparency Project, will moderate: The Civil Rights Issue of Our Time: Access to a Quality Education. In this session, panelists will explore why access to a quality education is a critical component in the struggle for civil rights and what is being done to improve educational equality and ensure effective teachers are in the classroom.
- #EIE14 will also include 12 strategy sessions covering some of the hottest topics and latest innovations in education. Sessions will include:
  - Innovation in the Certification Process: Rethinking Teacher Licensure
  - The Next Chapter in Educational Choice: Education Savings Accounts
  - Building Trust in the Classroom: Protecting Student Data Privacy and Security

Make sure to check out the 2014 Summit Agenda for more information on all of our sessions and speakers.

Each year, the National Summit on Education Reform provides lawmakers, policymakers and advocates the opportunity to learn about successful education reforms and together build consensus and form solutions to shared challenges. Don't miss this incredible opportunity to join the movement and improve education for our nation's students.

See you in D.C.!
