Curiosity... what is the difference between allowing 50 or less people in a pavilion verses allowing my family to come together for a cookout at our campsite? We want to have a cookout for Father's day. I feel like containing it to our personal camper and campsite is better than using a public area and public restrooms. I'm honestly not trying to start an argument, I love our state parks. I'm just confused by the request to keep the campground visitors to overnight guests only verses renting a pavilion and allowing 50 people.
