Thriving in today's fast-paced marketplace means constantly learning about new trends and practices. Fortunately, there are more business education resources than ever, including free online courses - some offered by top colleges and universities—that can take you from Introduction to Business 101 all the way to a Master's of Business Administration (MBA). In this issue, we look at some of your options for staying ahead of the curve.

CHECK OUT OUR LIBRARY

No reference to online training and education would be complete without mentioning BusinessUSA's library of business courses.

CREATE YOUR OWN MBA PROGRAM

Don't have the time or money to pursue an MBA? A "mini-MBA" can help you get to the same place.

FREE KNOWLEDGE

The Internet is a great source of free online courses and modules, many from leading universities, that will deepen your professional education.

SCORE AND EDUCATION

Business education comes in a lot of forms—including mentoring. Check out SCORE, a nationwide network of business centers and volunteer experts created to support small businesses.

THE BENEFITS OF GOING BACK TO CLASS

There are a lot of benefits to enrolling in a more formal business program. For one, you have the chance to build a network of business-minded colleagues.
