Just an FYI- saw this on the page RV'ers over 50. A lot of negative comments followed. I'm proud of my state and thought someone might want to address as this is a very large group. Thank you. Post copied below made by Regina Allen Andrews.

We're at Devil's Fork State Park in South Carolina camping at Lake Jocassee. Beautiful lake and nice little sandy beaches around the lake. If you have a boat, the waterfalls on the lake are gorgeous.

BUT, the park staff at the check in station are the rudest people I've ever dealt with. Also, the campground roads have huge pot holes. The tree limbs need to be trimmed, and getting a large 5th in is near impossible. As pretty as this place is, we probably won't be back. We are not even sure we can get into the dump station!

So beware if you come here with a large camper.
