Gentlemen: Further to my e-mail of last week concerning the proposed housing development on Captain Sam's Spit, located at the end of Kiawah Island, below is a Google Map picture of the peninsula in question. I would have to question the sanity of anyone even considering such a project. The first hurricane that comes along will wash anything located there into the surrounding marsh, and the owners will come whining to FEMA and the State for help in rebuilding their homes where they should not have been in the first place. If this ill-fated project actually gets approved, it should require a $500 million bond from the builder to mitigate the mess when the houses are blown from the peninsula..

I would also suggest checking the campaign fund donor list of any legislator actually supporting this deranged venture. Where are the ethics laws when you need them?

Thank you for your consideration of this environmental issue.
