Fla. Justices Weigh Patient Privacy Rights In Med Mal Cases

The Florida Supreme Court on Thursday will weigh a challenge to a state law allowing doctors and hospitals accused of medical malpractice to seek medical history and other information from a patient-plaintiff's previous doctors, in a case that touches on privacy and constitutionality issues. Here, Law360 recaps the history of the case in advance of Thursday's oral arguments.

Coffee Shop Can Fight Beer-To-Go Guidance, Texas Court Says

A Texas appeals court on Wednesday held that Cuvee Coffee, a popular roaster in Austin, can fight a Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission decision banning the coffee shop from selling beer it packages on site, holding that the commission's posted guidance on the issue qualified as a rule that the roaster can challenge.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

As EPA Sets 2017 Renewable Fuel Volumes, Future Is Unclear

The Environmental Protection Agency has released its final 2017 volumes under the Renewable Fuel Standard, a program established by Congress to spur development and use of biofuels in the U.S. transportation sector. But the 2017 numbers may face legal challenges — and the entire RFS program could be restructured by the Trump EPA or the new Congress, says James Rubin of Dorsey & Whitney LLP.

The FTC's Overreaching Regulation Of Homeopathic Drugs

Recently, the U.S. Federal Trade Commission decided once again to force itself into the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's ill-fitting shoes, establishing safety and effectiveness standards for over-the-counter homeopathic drugs. The FTC is only obfuscating the already-strained regulatory framework for homeopathic drugs, say attorneys from Venable LLP.

Philip Hirschkop: Quietly Making Noise For 50 Years

The first paragraph of Philip Hirschkop's obituary is going to contain the word "Loving." That's undeniable. But many of Hirschkop's other cases are just as groundbreaking in their own right. They aren't household names like Loving, but they have affected millions in the nation's households, says Randy Maniloff of White and Williams LLP.
