A laundry sink is part of the standard equipment in the kitchens of the low-cost housing project here, but officials admit the possibility that it may become an aid for the procrastinating housewife.

The kitchen sink is divided into two equal parts, one for the dishes and one for a bit of laundry that the housewife may wish to wash while dishes are in the other part.

"As we have pointed out to some, the second half could be used to cover dirty dishes," J. R. Basiger, management supervisor, remarked.
