Don't Ignore the King Winners

BY PHIL KERPEN

If the Court rules that the Obama administration must execute Obamacare as written, more people would be liberated from its coercive individual mandate than would lose a subsidy, while millions more would be freed from its employer mandate that effectively caps their hours at 29 a week.

Why Net Premium Increases Will Often Be Even Larger than You Think

BY SETH CHANDLER

Obamacare's overly complicated subsidy-calculation formula will soon be yielding some unexpected and unappealing results for policy-holders, many of whom will see their costs go up by an even greater percentage than their plan's premiums.

The Rise of Executive Federalism

BY MICHAEL S. GREVE

If the United States is to stop sliding toward increased executive lawlessness, it must return to real federalism, with states raising and spending their own money instead of getting funding from the federal government under the guise of federal-state "cooperation."

'Broken Windows' Policing Is Not Broken

BY DAVID W. MURRAY & JOHN P. WALTERS

There were only about one-sixth as many murders in New York City in 2014 as in 1993, yet many liberals—and some conservatives—are pushing to stop the sort of commonsense policing that led to such extraordinary success.

Magna Carta: Eight Centuries of Liberty

BY DANIEL HANNAN

The 800th anniversary of the Magna Carta is a timely reminder that our constitutional arrangements, with their protections of property rights, are the only real barrier against the sort of coercion by the state that is on the rise in 21st-century America.
