CFPB Proposal Could Shut Off Bank Payday Loan Alternative

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's proposed restrictions for the payday loan market are likely to bring about significant changes to the way those loans are underwritten, but worries have arisen that the proposal shuts off banks from offering a potentially safer alternative.

ACA, Marriage Cases Only Fraction Of Verrilli's Legacy

While history will best remember outgoing U.S. Solicitor General Donald B. Verrilli Jr. for his work to uphold the landmark Affordable Care Act and his successful advocacy for same-sex marriage rights, his skill also shone through in less prominent wins and even nominal losses, former colleagues said.

Pressure Mounts On UK Watchdogs To Tackle Online Lenders

The FCA and the Bank of England need to tightly regulate the billion-dollar peer-to-peer lending and crowdfunding markets due to inherent risks they pose to consumers and investors, a senior British lawmaker argued in a pair of letters Wednesday.

Industry Groups Sue To Stop DOL's Fiduciary Rule

Eight industry and trade groups filed a lawsuit Wednesday in Texas federal court challenging the Department of Labor's fiduciary rule, saying the department overstepped its authority in making the rule and that the new regulations will harm retirement savers.

SEC Chief Hints At New Order-Routing Disclosure Rules

The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission could soon take a look at proposals to enhance disclosure rules for how customer orders are handled and executed, SEC Chair Mary Jo White said Thursday, as part of efforts to increase transparency in equity exchanges.

ANALYSIS

End Isn't Nigh For FCC Rules On Local TV Station Deals

Although broadcasters cried victory last week when the Third Circuit tossed the Federal Communications Commission's limits on joint sales agreements among local TV stations, a clear opening was left for the agency to save the rules, a move it seems determined take.

DOL Fiduciary Rule Challengers Leave Nothing To Chance

Industry groups filing a lawsuit challenging the U.S. Department of Labor's fiduciary rule have covered all their bases in an effort to increase their chances of success, backing up novel administrative law claims with a First Amendment claim and filing in an injunction-friendly Dallas federal court, experts said.

EU Seeks To Break Down Cross-Border Barriers For Funds

The European Union's executive rule-makers on Thursday moved toward knocking down barriers to cross-border trade in investment funds inside the EU, aiming to make the €13 trillion market a cornerstone of the region's aim to forge a Capital Markets Union.

Tribal Casino Row Puts DOI Policy Shift Under Microscope

A bid to block construction of the Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe's casino in Massachusetts will likely force a ruling on a U.S. Department of the Interior policy change that allowed the tribe to keep building despite unresolved litigation, marking a key test for the DOI's new approach and potentially dealing a blow to opponents of tribal casinos.

Will DTSA Whistleblower Protection Be A Game-Changer?

There is no dispute that the protections of Section 7(b) of the Defend Trade Secrets Act are received by whistleblower advocates as welcome news. But those representing whistleblowers shouldn't assume the immunity provisions will be construed broadly. It is important that lawyers representing whistleblowers advocate for an interpretation that advances the law's lofty goals, say Michael Filoromo and Matthew LaGarde at Katz Marshall & Banks LLP.

Inside DOD's New Insider Threat Rule For Cleared Industry

The U.S. government is turning increasingly to private enterprise to support counterintelligence programs. A new U.S. Department of Defense rule requires each cleared contractor to implement an insider threat program, effectively taking a requirement familiar to contractors with access to intelligence information and applying it generally to thousands of cleared contractors, says James Harris of Holland & Knight LLP.

EPA Drilling Waste Regs Under Fire: 5 Things To Know

A recent lawsuit filed against the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency by several environmental nongovernmental organizations urges the EPA to promulgate regulations under the federal Resource Conservation and Recovery Act involving the disposal and handling of oil and gas wastes. The case is in its early stages, but already there are five important factors to consider, say attorneys at Arnold & Porter LLP.
