You're probably right. If possible for you to go, the weekdays will probably be much better!

My question concerns the limited access to the state parks. While the announcement on the reopening and guidelines were clear, I am concerned about the gates being closed until capacity drops at which time the gates will be opened to allow more visitors in: There are many considerate people but there are also many that are not. What is to keep people from coming and staying all day and the same doing this every day? I love over an hour away from parks such as Charlestowne Landing and Edisto, how can I possibly guarantee that we will be able to enter the day we get there at all?

There is no guarantee that you will be able to enter. We do suggest that you stay close to home and visit parks near you so that you don't travel long distances only for parks to be closed.

I am in Cottageville so I am positioned where they are at least 45 minutes away with the exception of Givhans

If you venture out I would suggest arriving early. Also, please know due to ordinances in place by the town of Edisto, Edisto Beach State Park will NOT be opening for day-use access on May 1.
