Thanks, much better than mine. I don't have the feel for it at the moment.

A slight, more action-y twist for you to consider. As The King said, "A little less conversation, a little more action please."

Although the office is unaware of any formal, specific proposal to combine these two great South Carolina institutions, discussions about a prospective merger are hardly new. Gov. Haley would welcome a further exploration of this possibility through an open dialogue that includes other key stakeholders ranging from the students, faculty, and boards to local officials, legislators, and other members of the community.

Thoughts on this? What am I missing?

From me –

"While there has been no official actions taken, conversations about combining these two great South Carolina institutions are not new. Gov. Haley is open to hearing any discussions that include the pertinent stakeholders including legislators, the respective boards, teachers, students, and members of the community."
