Kevin,

Tomorrow, January 9th at 12:00 eastern time, American Petroleum Institute (API) President and CEO Jack Gerard will give his annual State of American Energy address.

By way of this live webcast link, you are invited to hear the current state of the American energy industry and why it's so important to be fully engaged in Vets4Energy in 2018 (link will become active just prior to speech at 12:00 Noon, EST, Tuesday, January 9th).

As veterans, we have a unique voice and opportunity to educate the public as to why American produced energy is so very important and how it relates to national security. This country needs to have leaders to bring this topic to them, and as a veteran, you have the creditability to move these issues forward.

Although not every veteran has had "boots on the ground" in the Middle East, we've all stood willing to serve and sacrifice to ensure American security. Our countrymen do not have the same exposure to the facts related to these wars or the clear picture of why American excellence make us the preferred choice for energy development and production.

American companies produce energy much safer than those in the Middle East, as related to both the environment and human safety. We can provide energy for ourselves and our allies so that we are not fighting wars over resources, or held by world energy markets controlled by those who do not support the American dream.

Please participate in tomorrow's American energy address as it will provide solid information for educating other veterans on why energy security directly impacts national security and our way of life.

We will also be posting a link on our Facebook page and website. Additionally, after the speech, a link will be posted to watch the recorded event.

Capt. James McCormick, USA (ret.)
