Friend-

Yesterday, our campaign was the subject of a great piece by Kathryn Jean Lopez in The National Review Online. In a short Q & A, we discuss what I find really valuable: the gratitude I have to my family and heritage, the substance of my qualifications and campaign, the great achievements we have made thus far and, most importantly, my passion for the people of Nevada.

I have much more faith and respect in Nevada's voters than many political pundits. People I meet on the campaign trail in Nevada are never interested in the gossip. Voters are issue-focused. They always want to know what I am going to do to fix our state and our country. Our rugged, independent voters here want to know how I am going to protect their families, their individual freedoms and get back some of their liberty. They are very concerned for our future.

Be sure to read more from the interview in The National Review Online article regarding my campaign for Attorney General.
