Sounding the alarm

At Sun City, candidate Cruz condemns plan to accept refugees

During a campaign stop Monday in Sun City Hilton Head, U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz condemned President Barack Obama's plan to accept up to 10,000 Syrian refugees following the attacks in Paris.

The plan "is nothing short of lunacy," Cruz, a presidential contender, told an overflow crowd of hundreds at the community's pavilion.

"This is a humanitarian crisis. There are genuine refugees that need to be cared for, but they should be resettled in the Middle East in majority Muslim countries," Cruz said to raucous applause from the crowd.

Cruz lends his voice to a growing number of governors and legislators condemning the refugee program after reports that at least one of the terrorists involved in Friday's attacks was a recent Syrian immigrant to France.

Many Republican lawmakers are speaking out against U.S. participation in the federal program amid concerns it would not be able to screen refugees with ties to ISIS, Cruz said.

On Monday, Gov. Nikki Haley said she continues to support allowing persecuted immigrants to come to South Carolina — as long as they're not from Syria.

Republicans in the House and Senate called on Haley to oppose all international refugees.

Cruz sounded a similar sentiment Monday.

Republican presidential hopeful Sen. Ted Cruz shakes hands and speaks with Sun City Hilton Head residents after speaking there Monday. Cruz said President Barack Obama and Democratic front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton are crippling the U.S. response to terrorism by refusing to address the Islamic State as a radical group.
