BigLaw's Diversity Problem Puts It On Collision Course With Millennials

By Max Stendahl

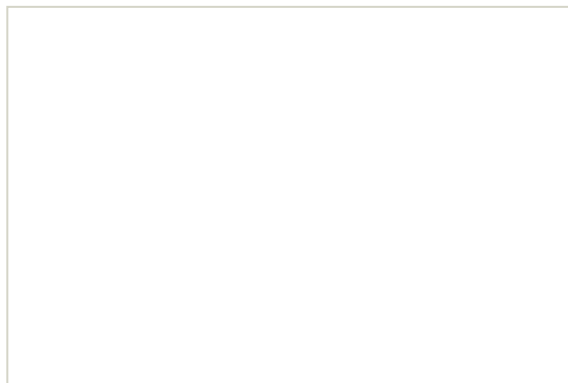

If law firms don't make immediate strides toward becoming more inclusive, they risk alienating the next generation of lawyers, who are highly attuned to institutional bias and increasingly vocal about eradicating it.

Porn, Politics And The Undoing Of Kathleen Kane

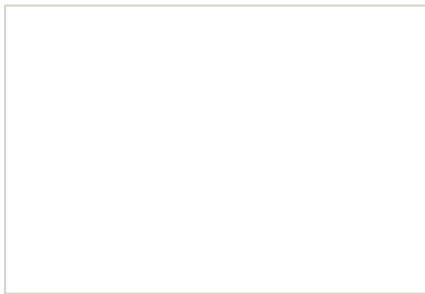

By Matt Fair

Some say Pennsylvania Attorney General Kathleen Kane sought to shed light on a boys club culture when she released emails that sparked the “Porngate” scandal, and others say it was a distraction and retaliation ploy — two narratives that vie for legitimacy as she heads to trial on perjury charges.

Unbiased Jurors Will Be Tough To Find As Trump U. Cases Progress

By Sindhu Sundar

The judge overseeing a pair of Trump University lawsuits faces the challenge of navigating competing goals: moving the cases along and finding juries that have not been tainted by the presidential election.

SEC Battle With Miami Makes Waves In Muni Bond Enforcement

By Ed Beeson

The Securities and Exchange Commission’s push for more municipal bond-related enforcement actions will face a big test later this month when the agency squares off with Miami in district court, marking the SEC’s first federal trial against a municipality over an alleged offering fraud.

Jan Schlichtmann Talks Travolta, Trump And Ancient Rome

By Melissa Maleske

Jan Schlichtmann, the plaintiff-side environmental crusader of the 1995 bestseller “A Civil Action,” sat down with Law360 to discuss demagoguery, time travel by way of John Travolta, and his belief that Donald Trump’s rise echoes the last days of the Roman republic.

Secret Lives of Lawyers

Houston’s Richard Mithoff Looks For Cliffhangers Outside Of Court

By Michelle Casady

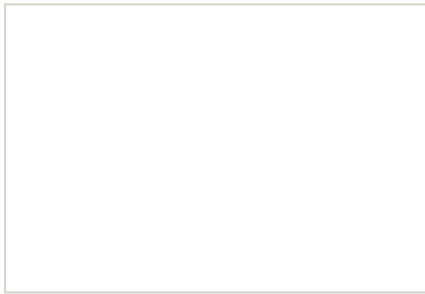

Plaintiffs attorney Richard Mithoff, 70, spends his free time scaling the rock faces of the world’s tallest peaks, in part because hanging several hundred feet off the ground provides lessons for his day job.

The Lost Art Of Being A Counselor

By Michael R. Freed, Gunster

The legal profession would be wise to heed the old adage: If all that you have is a hammer then everything looks like a nail. Lawyers who have as their hammer only the ability to solve specific legal problems as neatly presented will likely get caught in a race to the bottom.

Employers Should Move Beyond Mere ADA Compliance

By David J. Rowland, Seyfarth Shaw LLP

For more than a quarter of a century, employers have felt a level of exasperation with the Americans with Disabilities Act, partly because compliance is more complicated than with other federal civil rights statutes, and partly because the EEOC and Congress have repeatedly changed the rules. Lost in the compliance thicket has been a great opportunity.
