Katherine,

The other day in Iowa, I was asked by a self-identified atheist about whether I've been talking too much about my faith on the campaign trail.

In fact, he asked if I was running for "pastor in chief." Well, I answered his question – and the message I had for him has now been viewed ==over 6.3 million times and shared over 100,000 times on social media:==

Conservatives – believers and non-believers alike – loved seeing someone stand up for religious freedom and the importance of faith in the public square.

But I need your help to spread the word even further – click here to watch the video (if you haven't yet), make a donation to our campaign, then share the link with a friend.

I want to live in a country where Americans feel comfortable living out their faith, in private AND in public. But we've seen from the attacks liberals will level – and the policies of the Obama Administration – that some on the left don't agree.

I've promised to voters everywhere I go: I will not be a president who will pit you against any other group of Americans, but I'm going to be honest about my values.

If that sounds like the kind of President you want – gauging from the reaction to this video, you're not alone – go here to make an immediate, secure donation to my campaign right now.

And spread the message, because the stakes are too high just to let this election go by. Issues like the role of faith in the public square, marginalized by this president and liberal extremism, are foundational to who we are as a country.

Thank you for your support so far this campaign . We're not going to back down.

Thanks,

Marco Rubio

Republican Candidate for President
