Hi, I am curious if state parks have tornado shelters? We are SC RVers who just spent 45 mins sheltering at home in Mount Pleasant under a tornado warning, a little surreal as a coastal resident. I am assuming you'd recommend guests go to a bath house if this ever happened while camping there?

We ask that visitors go to the nearest open park facility during the threat of a tornado. This is usually the bathhouse in a campground.

Gotcha, thanks. Not a question I thought I'd need to ask in SC, but just curious what protocol is since it can be a rare issue I guess!
