Black Skin Privilege: The Media's Love of Black Racism & Violence

<http://canadafreepress.com/article/74684>

It is a sad commentary on our nation that the mainstream media refuses to take a critical look at the increasingly violent, racist Black Lives Matter movement, and often promotes those activists' depraved view of America, the least racist nation on the face of the earth.

The outrageous, even genocidal, statements issued every day now by hate-filled black nationalists and their radical allies who are part of what is becoming an African-American "Occupy Wall Street" movement, are barely examined at all.

In a case of defining deviancy down, these antisocial, anti-white sentiments are accepted by the media as normal, even admirable.

Black Lives Matter rabble rousers didn't say a peep in protest when the New Black Panther Party offered a cash reward for Wilson "dead or alive."

The same group also offered a $10,000 cash bounty for so-called white Hispanic George Zimmerman, the neighborhood watch volunteer who shot young black man Trayvon Martin in self-defense. Zimmerman too was cleared by the courts and the Justice Department.

This is not an exhaustive list of black criminals these activists claim are the real victims.

Brown and Martin are far from alone.

The Wilson and Zimmerman cases are as dead as a doornail, yet these people keep lying about the facts in order to energize their dangerous supporters. To them, Brown and Martin were innocent young, college-bound angels, not vicious thugs.

Let's look at some of the psychotic statements some black radicals routinely get away with in the media.

Take the comments earlier this week

<<http://dailycaller.com/2015/08/18/black-lives-matter-protestors-all-lives-matter-is-a-violent-statement-video/>> by Black Lives Matter protester Julius Jones.

Jones made the astonishingly absurd claim Tuesday that the phrase "all lives matter" is "actually a violent statement."

Jones said:

I would say temper your perspective with the urgency that black lives are actively under attack and we are in a terrible war with our own country, African-Americans are Americans and we are not treated like that.

We are not treated as if black lives matter and when people say "all lives matter" it's actually a violent statement because the only time that people say "all lives matter" is in opposition to black lives matter and it's the most violent statement of love that you can do.

It's like "all lives matter!" yes, we understand that, it's true, but in this country for the long time the United States acts like black lives don't matter.

CNN's Wolf Blitzer, who, has challenged some of these activists, made no attempt to challenge these bald-face lies.

Nonetheless Jones' statement is a helpful reminder that the Black Lives Matter is actually the Only Black Lives Matter movement.

Jones' comments may just as well have come out of the mouth of unrepentant terrorist and Obama pal Bill Ayers.

People seem to forget that Ayers' Weather Underground terror group was part of the Black Power movement and dedicated to overthrowing so-called white privilege.

Jones ought to be wearing a cape and pointy hood and burning crosses.

He's no different morally than a Klansmen and yet he gets taken seriously.

Other extremist blacks are handled with kid-gloves by the media.

The media barely raised an eyebrow when Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, a black Democrat, welcomed criminal gangs and radical groups into city government.

Rawlings-Blake received hardly any media coverage earlier this year when she allied herself with race rioters.

She's the one who proudly boasted that she protected the First Amendment right to protest by providing space to those who "wished to destroy" local businesses.

Racial arsonist Al Sharpton is treated with admiration and respect. He even has a talk show on MSNBC that he uses to spread his racist venom.

In 2009 the media didn't care much about Van Jones, Obama's green jobs czar and self-described "rowdy black nationalist" and "communist."

Reporters only cared when Jones was revealed to have signed a 9/11 Truther petition and was forced out of the administration.

Like Sharpton he was rewarded by the left-wing media with a talk show.

The media has only been barely interested over the years in President Obama's 20-year membership in white-hating, America-hating, Jew-hating Rev. Jeremiah Wright's Trinity United Church in Chicago that is more or less a Christian version of the Nation of Islam.

Wright and his ilk are no big deal the media assure us.

They just speak in a different idiom that the rest of America is too ignorant and stupid to understand.

In other words, white people can never "get" it because they're not black.

Holding black people who do terrible things and hold repugnant views accountable isn't fair, according to the media.

Racist black American radicals get a pass because bad things were done to their ancestors 150 years ago by people who are long dead and have faded into the mist of history.

This line of thinking ignores the fact that slavery, in its various iterations, has been around perhaps 4,000 years or more and was widely accepted nearly everywhere in the world. Slavery still exists <<http://www.danielpipes.org/blog/2010/07/slavery-in-muslim-majority-countries>> today in various forms in the Muslim countries of Afghanistan, Mali, Mauritania, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, and Yemen.

But America long ago atoned for its original sin of slavery. Following an enlightened trend, Vermont abolished slavery in 1777 and the United States prohibited the importation of slaves in 1808. President Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863 and at the end of a bloody civil war in which as many as 750,000 soldiers—proportionately equivalent <<http://www.bbc.com/news/magazine-17604991>> to 7.5 million U.S. deaths given America's current population—slavery was abolished in the U.S. in 1865 by the Thirteenth Amendment (although Democrats and their terrorist wing, the Ku Klux Klan, resisted this by murdering blacks and their supporters and enacting the odious Jim Crow laws).

To these radicals who seem intent on resurrecting the profoundly ugly Black Power movement, it is as if the Civil War never happened. They refuse to accept that the United States has changed dramatically over the years and that many of those who sold Africans into slavery were Africans themselves. Their loud demands continue as they dishonestly try to appropriate the mantle of noble anti-slavery campaigners like Frederick Douglass.

This colossal double-standard in the media is a function of what David Horowitz terms “black skin privilege.”

This preferential race-based treatment of African-Americans fuels violence and social media-driven reigns of terror. It encourages today's race-baiting lynch mobs to troll the Internet to satisfy their desire to be offended and outraged. When the cranks and low-rent bigots of the so-called Black Lives Matter movement target an enemy, they get plenty of support from the media, and in many cases, from politicians.

Horowitz explained that he “coined this term because it encapsulated the facts that are indispensable to understanding our national crisis over race ... [that has its origins in] the Civil Rights Acts of the 1960s [which] outlawed racial categories in governmental regulations and laws.” The civil rights left “began to reverse this historic victory by reintroducing racial categories and privileges into every aspect of public life from job applications to college admissions, to presumptions of innocence and conclusions of guilt.”

Horowitz continued:

The term “black skin privilege”—which is an indubitable fact of our social life—hoists the racial hypocrites on their own petard. You want to talk about racism? Let's talk about the racist attitudes and policies of progressives and lynch mobs of color that they inspire.
