South Carolina Beef Producers and Publix Supermarkets---Working to Assure Quality

The cattle ultrasound technology, performed by a Virginia-based veterinarian, helps the Yons determine their breeding practices. After performing the ultrasound, the veterinarian stores the data on a computer disk and sends the information to the central data center at the University of Iowa. The information from participating cattlemen and women throughout the nation are analyzed at the Iowa location to maintain consistent analysis interpretations. After analysis, the final report is sent to the Yons to help them decide their breeding strategies.

Armed with years of performance information compiled by the American Angus Association, the Yon's goal is to breed lean, tender cattle. They can verify their findings by comparing the bull's data with that of the bull's progeny. Kevin said, "There's been a real shift in thinking by those of us in the Beef Industry. Where, in the past, the thinking was 'Beef is King', the present trend is toward thinking 'We're growing meals'. As a result, we're far more interested in producing a consistent, quality product. The way to achieve that goal is to pay very close attention to the genetics".

Created 10 years ago, BQA brings together beef producers with one strong goal: to produce safe, wholesome beef that provides a great beef experience every time. The BQA program's mission is to maximize consumer confidence in and acceptance of beef by focusing the industry's attention on beef quality assurance through the use of science, research and education initiatives.

The goal of BQA is to transform the beef industry from a commodity-based sector of commerce to one that puts consumer needs and desires first. Producers in several states have already been certified and the goal of the South Carolina Beef Board is to achieve certification soon. James Sease, Chairman of the South Carolina Beef Board said, "We're currently working with the Cattlemen's Beef Association and our member producers here to ensure that South Carolina Beef producers take advantage of the Quality Assurance Program. The changes taking place in the market make it more important than ever that our members keep pace with producers in other states."

Another indication of the importance of developing and maintaining such Quality Assurance Programs is evident in the purchasing changes currently taking place among retailers. For example, Publix Super Markets, Inc. is now in the process of developing their own beef standards. "By developing our own standards for the beef we buy, we will be assuring our customers that the beef they buy from any Publix is a cut above that of the competition. Our customers will be able to take advantage of higher quality "choice" cuts. They will also be able to count upon a consistent level of quality", says Skip Chandler, Retail Meat Coordinator for Publix Super Markets, Inc.

The scientific advances employed by the Yons and other producers, the Beef Quality Assurance Program, and the policies such as those now being adopted by Publix, all guarantee a more tender, tastier, beef-dining experience for you and your family. So, when you throw another steak on the barbie this summer, think about all the people and technology that it took to provide you the best from "gate to plate."

The South Carolina Association of Veterinarians (SCAV) Hall of Fame seeks to honor the outstanding contributions our animal companions make to human lives and heightens public awareness of the human animal bond. It also allows the SCAV members to share in celebrating their patient’s accomplishments by serving as nominators for the Hall of Fame. Chuckie won the Companion category which selects the animal that provides an outstanding service to human companions. A Beagle named “Buster” from Townville, who saved his family from a house fire by waking them up in the middle of the night, won the Hero category. A German Shepherd named “Cindy” from Charleston won the Professional category for law enforcement work.

Chuckie was nominated by Ms. Jinki Hopkins and Dr. Randy Basinger of the South Carolina Surgical Referral Service in Columbia. “Delight’s Inspiration,” more commonly known as “Chuckie” is part of the Dream Riders program, which provides recreational and emotional therapy to children and adults with special needs. As a program horse for the disabled, Chuckie is very special because he has a disability. He was a champion show horse who was retired from competition by his owner Chris Coats, when he developed blindness in one eye. Instead of a show ring with speakers and lights, Chuckie now has wheelchairs banging around his legs, and rag balls bouncing off his sides when riders miss the catches. As a racking horse, his gait is very smooth, which is comforting for riders with physical problems, and he has patience in abundance. He has been a wonderful asset to the Dream Rider’s program, which uses the human animal bond to help people in need gain confidence and acquire new skills.

To learn more about Chuckie, Dream Riders, or physical disabilities programs, contact Jinki Hopkins at 803-798-0803 or email VetMeetings@aol.com
