Barnwell Heights and was established in 1951 to provide worker housing for the nearby NRHP-eligible Savannah River Site (SRS). It was designed by the South Carolina architectural firm of Lyles, Bissett, Carlisle & Wolff in partnership with Atlanta-based landscape architect and planning consultant Eugene R. Martini. The neighborhood was built following the passage of Public Law 139, "The Defense Housing and Community Facilities and Services Act," which spurred the construction of housing developments built in communities around the SRS.
